

I continue to note the controversy over the recent Super Bowl half-time show. While the Janet Jackson "exposure" seems to receive the headlines, the entire halftime show should be examined. It was totally disgusting throughout. Between the genital grabbing by Nelly, the simulated strip tease, the disregard for the flag by Kid Rock, and song lyrics which glorified drugs, whores, and violence toward women, the entire show should have been rated "R" so that people could have turned it off.

It continues to be a symptom of an overly permissive society but this supposed "performance" was too much. Enough is enough. I'm not a fan of censorship, but I don't expect to be exposed to such vulgarity during a "prime time" sports show.

I can only encourage you to exercise the penalties and regulations to ensure that the American public is not inadvertently exposed to such a disgusting performance in the future. It is common to see this type of degrading and indecent performance on MTV which targets the younger audiences and the NFL got exactly what it paid for in having them produce this show.

I can only hope that some leadership will be shown by a governing organization which the American public counts on to protect our interests.
